

Worldsteel choose True2Life for Worldwide Education Environment

The International Iron and Steel Institute (IISI) recently selected True2Life Realtime Web3D for the award-winning steeluniversity.org website.

True2Life provided a complete virtual steelworks offering great e-Learning features and unique usability, allowing users to take a self-guided walk through the virtual steel plant. True2Life developed online game-like simulations that provide open-ended problem based exercises and hands-on learning opportunities, enabling steeluniversity.org to give users the chance to run their own virtual steelworks, with all the complexity and scale of the real thing. This is an ideal introduction to the nuance of modern, integrated steelworks, where raw and recycled materials are transformed into valuable steel products.

The steeluniversity.org project received the Royal Academy of Engineering's 2006 Education Innovation Award. The project also received the 2004 European Academic Software Award (EASA).

"We have been very impressed by the performance of the True2Life team in creating our interactive Web3D virtual steelworks for the award-winning steeluniversity.org e-learning resource. They quickly acquired a detailed understanding of a modern steelworks and its complex technologies to create a very realistic simulated realtime online environment that we are convinced will be of great value to the steel industry and the academic community. It will add another Wow factor to our website".

"True2Life have adopted a very professional approach to this development, demonstrating excellent project management skills, close attention to detail, a rigorous approach to reviews and revisions and an enthusiastic 'Can Do, Will Do' attitude throughout the project. We have engaged them for several follow-up exercises and really enjoy working with them."
